RUMP CONFERENCE, AIMED AT ZIONISM
REAFFIRMS TRADITIONAL REFORM VIEWS

By Jewish Telegraphic Agency

ATLANTIC CITY—The conference of the sixty reform rabbis who, as a minority within the Central Conference of American Rabbis, are opposed to political Zionism, concluded here this week determined to strengthen the traditional interpretation of Reform Judaism.

The rabbis went on record endorsing the economic and cultural development of Palestine, but affirmed the primacy of religion as the basis of Jewish life. Basing their stand on the historic interpretation of Reform Judaism, they condemned the secularistic tendencies in American life. One of the central points in their discussion was the problem of what practical steps might be taken to enlist the interest of Jewish laymen in revitalizing the Reform movement.

Asserting its loyalty to the Central Conference of American Rabbis, the gathering unanimously agreed to prepare a statement on the subjects discussed at the sessions. This statement, which will also include the attitude of the rabbis to the Zionist movement, will be submitted to "like-minded rabbis" who were unable to attend the conference.

Among the projects discussed at the conference was the publication of a periodical. A committee consisting of Rabbis Samuel Goldenson, Louis Wolsey, Elmer Berger, Morris Lazaron, William Rosenau and William Fineshriber was appointed to implement the program of the group.

IN THE SERVICE NOW

With Indiana's Jewish Boys at War

So much interest has been shown in the doings of Indiana's Jewish boys in the service that The Post has decided to run a weekly column under the above heading. Parents and friends, not only in Indianapolis but throughout Indiana are invited to send in contributions, as are the boys in the service themselves. The Post is sent free to any member of the United States forces anywhere provided their parents are subscribers.

RICHARD (DICK) KRAMER DESCRIBES EXPERIENCES

To the editor,

First, for a little history: I was inducted Friday, Feb. 13 and before many days were up, I found myself solidly entrenched in the Ozark Mountains, but 10 miles from Little Rock. As the novelty of seeing people without shoes wore off, my basic training advanced. By the time eight weeks were up, the novel was transformed to the ordinary, and vice-versa. After days and days of the most intensive drill imaginable, we were ready for our greatest test, that of being transferred to our permanent units, and taking our places, most insignificantly, beside the defenders of Ba-taan.

In addition to my other duties at Camp Robinson, I was named assistant to the Special Service Officer in charge of morale activities for the battalion. This may sound impossible, but I wrote, directed, produced, M.C.'d a show for the camp, which was witnessed by 600 soldiers. Co-operation from the men was extremely difficult to obtain, and for good reason too. Rehearsals were never meant to be held after thirteen taxing hours in the field. For my efforts, I received letters of commendation from the highest ranking military authorities in the camp. So it was worthwhile after all.

Well, to continue with the story: On April 27 I was transferred to Duncan Field, Texas. Located but eight miles from San Antonio, the camp is directly across from Kelly field, and but 23 miles from Randolph Field, the West Point of the Air. Duncan is an air corps station and is in the process of training units of approximately 1,000 men for the purpose of constructing and maintaining air bases for offensive operations against the enemy. Each such group is called an air depot group, and is shipped, when fully trained, to do the job anywhere the need arises.

Nine days after I arrived here, and after only two and one-half months in the army, I was given the unprecedented promotion from buck private to first sergeant. It's really hard to believe, myself, and as I chance occasionally to look at my fabulous chevrons, I still find it hard to believe. At any rate I'm topkick of a chemical warfare platoon, attached to one of these air depot groups. Our job is supposed to deal with the decontamination of gassed areas. How I ever got there from my original classification as an "Assistant to a Jewish Chaplain," I'll never be able to grasp.

I've been having a wonderful time in San Antonio—a swell city with a very hospitable Jewish community. The Jewish U. S. O. works double and overtime, and does a very creditable job. Right now they have an interesting project I might mention to you. They have a recording machine, and for a dime, they register a three-minute recording of your voice with a message for your family. Of course one can send as many as he wants to whomever he desires. This, it seems to me is an excellent means of promoting the army, as well as being a permanent record for the soldier's family.

Incidentally, I had dinner with Rabbi David Jacobson, whom I'm certain you know very well. Later, we went to services at his temple, which I assure you is the most ornate and beautiful temple I have ever seen. Its cost was $250,000.00 and has a membership of approximately 600 families.

I'm up for Officer's Candidate School of the Air Corps Administrative Dept. This deals with personnel, morale, etc. I have a fairly good chance of making it, and I know you join in my hopes. I'll know in about two weeks whether I made it.

Let me take this opportunity of thanking you for sending me The Jewish Post. I read it religiously, and were it not for the news and editorial pages it contains, I would be completely out of touch with the Jewish world which meant so much to me but a very short time ago. The paper is really excellent and it tells me everything I want to know about Indianapolis, and its people. I'm sure the other men in the armed forces join me in thanking you for a contribution in making it available to them free of charge.

Don't forget my new address when you send my next copy of the Post.

Regards to our host of mutual friends.

Sincerely,

DICK KRAMER.

AL SEGAL Speaks On Case of the Red Hat

I AM INFORMED that if 75 percent of the congregations of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations vote that way, there will be pensions for retired Reform rabbis hereafter.

I hope no congregation will vote against this. It's all a matter of congregations being decent. Anyway, it seems to me, a rabbi is entitled to rest and comfort in his few remaining days after he has suffered congregations most of his adult life, as many a rabbi has had to do.

Yes, a rabbi at least should have enough to bury him after it's all over and he is at last allowed to seek the serenity of his grave. His grave must be a happy end for a rabbi or minister who has been like Prometheus upon whose vitals the vultures fed as he lay chained on Mt. Caucasus through many years. He is the one who stole fire from heaven in order to confer it as a blessing upon man and for that he was punished by the vultures feeding on his vitals.

All this makes me dreadfully mindful of how narrowly I myself escaped being a rabbi. At the end of my second year in the Hebrew Union College the authorities decided that Judaism might be more kindly served if I did not return to their seminary—a conclusion creditable both to their foresight and their compassion.

Now, well along in life—it's much better than I like to think—I let myself fall into solemn moments in which I consider how much happier I am as a columnist than I would have been as a rabbi. On those occasions my errant fancy takes hold of me and I become Rabbi Segal of K. K. Anshe Giborim Temple who is in his study, deep in his Sabbath sermon, when his wife intrudes with an interruption.

She has bought a new red hat. . . . "What do you think of it?" she asks.

"My dear," Rabbi Segal replies, "did you have to come bursting into my sermon with this new hat at this moment? Don't you ever stop to consider? I may be in the very midst of a thought . . . and you come bursting in with a hat. . . . A red hat, besides!"

"And what's the matter with a red hat?" she asks. "I think it's very lovely."

"Don't you ever stop to think, my dear?" You wearing a red hat! You, the rabbi's wife wearing a red hat! Don't you realize the challenge that's in a red hat? A red hat is far too conspicuous and advertises to every woman in the congregation that you are wearing a new hat."

"So what? I'll wear what I please. I'm not going to let my life be regulated by those . . . those harpies."

"Shush, shush, my dear, not so loud" . . . Rabbi Segal pulls down the windows. . . . "We've got to be careful. You know what they'll say. They'll say you have bought another new hat at their expense. It's hard enough getting along with them even without flaunting a red hat at them. Did you have to get a red hat?"

Rabbi Segal recalls his recent sermon on "The Wages of Sin." It practically divided the congregation against him. All the most influential members of the congregation said that wages was nothing for a rabbi to mention. Rabbis should keep off economic problems. Wages was for business men to worry about, not rabbis.

To be sure, none of the men of the congregation actually had heard Rabbi Segal's sermon, since it was given on Saturday. They heard about it from their wives. . . . "He preached something on wages," their wives said.

When the matter was brought up at the next meeting of the board, Rabbi Segal had protested: "But, gentlemen, I spoke on the wages of sin. It was perfectly harmless."

The president of the congregation replied that anyway, he shouldn't have mentioned sin. "The goyim may think you are reflecting on them if you mention sin. Good will is our motto."

Rabbi Segal has all this in mind as he looks at his wife's challenging new red hat. . . . "Besides," he says, "you look too good in that hat. You know they can't tolerate the wife of the rabbi looking any prettier than they."

He sighs almost regretfully as he regards his wife's slim figure. The years had treated her kindly enough and left her still graceful. Her slender figure had brought them only the envy of members' wives who looked at their own increasing girth and were distressed by invidious comparisons.

It had been one affliction after another in all the years of Rabbi Segal in his various congregations. . . . The time he was reprimanded for his sermon against the slums: . . . "Rabbi, don't you know some of the best Gentiles own the tenement houses?" . . . The time he served cocktails in his house. . . . "Rabbi, cocktails are all right in their place—in a member's house." . . . The time he came out in favor of electing a decent Board of Education. . . . "Rabbi, you should be careful. You're making us too conspicuous." . . . The time his daughter appeared in shorts at a tennis tournament. . . . "Rabbi Segal, we don't think a rabbi's daughter should show her legs in public" . . . The time he was scolded for not being seen enough in the public affairs of the community, such as Rotary Club meetings. . . . "Rabbi, don't you think it would be better for the Jewish community if the rabbi got around more?" . . . The time he was rebuked for being too much in the public limelight. . . . "Rabbi Segal, it's to our best interests that the rabbi shouldn't be too prominent in the public. Please, just lay low" . . . The time he took the trip to Europe. . . . "He takes trips to Europe. Do we take trips to Europe?"

Now his wife had bought this red hat. He was getting along in his years and he desired only peace, but a red hat on his wife's head would make more trouble. . . . "Please, my dear, take it back. Can't you buy a new black one that nobody will notice?"

Thank goodness, I sigh, I am a columnist instead of a rabbi. As a columnist I don't have to meet the customers face to face, and I may drink cocktails and my daughter could wear shorts at tennis, if I had a daughter. And my wife may safely wear a red hat.

Yes, rabbis are entitled to pensions at the end of it all. The proposed pension plan provides that the congregation shall pay a small percentage of the rabbi's salary into the pension fund, the rabbi himself shall pay something toward the fund and the Central Conference of American Rabbis also will contribute. This is all in line with the social justice that to Jews always has been a peremptory mandate.

Red Cross Here Honors Mrs. Sussman

A service bar for 25 years continuous volunteer work has been presented to Mrs. Wolf Sussman by the Indianapolis Red Cross, it was announced this week. The presentation was made at a Red Cross executive committee meeting, by W. I. Longworth, chairman of the Indianapolis chapter, of which Mrs. Sussman has been a director since 1919.

Mrs. Sussman had charge of a large surgical dressing work room in the downtown area in 1917 and 1918, and 100 women were engaged in war work under her direction for nearly two years, it was said. A total of 96,000 dressings were made at the work room.

Mr. Longworth pointed out that Mrs. Sussman has served continuously since that time in various departments and on various committees, including educational, membership, garment production, surgical dressings, old clothing campaigns and others. She also has been active in the annual Red Cross roll call for several years.

Mrs. Sussman was recently electd first vice-president of the Joseph and Anna Borinstein Home for the Aged, and is a charter member of the board of the Home.

TYPEWRITER, LARGE FAN SOUGHT FOR SOLDIER WORK BY J.W.B. HERE

Wanted a typewriter! The Army and Navy Committee of the Jewish Community Center Association which this week is entering on an enlarged program in anticipation of the influx of soldiers from the new Camp Atterbury, now under construction approximately 30 miles from the city, needs a typewriter. Any reader of The Post, whether in Indianapolis or out in the state, is asked to call our office, LI. 3404, if they have a spare typewriter they wish to donate. Readers outside of the city may write to The Jewish Post, Box 1633, Indianapolis.

At the same time a call was made for a large fan, known as the whirlwind type, which sets on a tall pedestal for use in the lounge at Kirshbaum Center. A total of 90 boys were served supper at the Center last Sunday night by the committee working under Mrs. David Lurvey, and that number together with the cadettes who entertain the soldiers, made the lounge almost unbearably warm. Readers of the Post are asked to call or write, and arrangements will be made to transport the fan to Kirshbaum Center.

LOX FISH

Indian Comes Back for More After Eating Bagel and Lox

By Jewish Telegraphic Agency
SHIRLEY, Mass.—To a certain camp in Massachusetts came a new army division recently—a division thickly populated, as it happened by Indians from the wide open spaces.

Some of these copper-skinned lads found their way to the USO club operated by the Jewish Welfare Board in Shirley, Mass. In fact, one of these young men came up to the buffet table during a USO dance and asked Geraldine Herman, the JWB worker, who was busy serving 900 assorted sandwiches to the guests, for something to eat. She offered him a cheese sandwich.

"No," said the Indian lad succinctly, "fish sandwich!"

The JWB worker looked around for a "fish sandwich," but all she could find was a real Jewish lox on bagel.

The Indian looked it over, ate it, and returned to inquire, in true dead pan fashion. "What kind fish?"

"Lox," said the worker, falling into the idiom.

"Never heard lox fish," said the soldier, and went away.

The next day he was around again.

The editor's chair,

There's a new social worker in the community, but for some reason the powers that be want the announcement of his arrival held up, although anyone who gets around at all knows he is here.

One of the returning members of the community ran into Rabbi Feuerlicht in Atlantic City, where he presumably was attending the convention of the 60 or so rabbis there to attempt to spread their views on Zionism, and according to the J.T.A. news write-up, also on Reform Judaism. Although The Post is definitely Zionist on its editorial page, in its news column it tried to keep a clear impartiality, weighing the items as they arrive, and assigning them space and headlines proportionate to their news value. Certainly there are anti-Zionist readers of The Post, although the number has declined rapidly in the past few years, and they have every right to express their views through the columns of this paper. No list of the rabbis attending the Atlantic City convention was issued by the Jewish Telegraphic Agency, which in my opinion was poor reporting, and I wonder if Rabbi Milton Grenwald, of Evansville, also attended the sessions.

I didn't see anything about it in the paper here, but I may have overlooked it. But anyway down in Louisville they were quite excited several weeks back about the sentencing to five years in prison of Mr. and Mrs. George K. Bodenschatz on charges of being Nazi agents. The names are familiar to me because when I lived in Louisville, the leaders there were quite aroused about Mrs. Bodenschatz. A member of the rather aristocratic women's clubs, etc., she was continually making the rounds of these organizations, luncheon clubs, meetings, etc., giving subtle pro-Nazi speeches. Saying what the Nazis had done to rebuild a downtrodden country, pointing out that what was happening to the Jews was exaggerated, and even so, the Jews did control everything, etc. Well we didn't know what to do, although we were able finally to find out that she visited Germany every summer, but when this information was broadcast, she readily admitted it and went right on, saying that she was still interested only in bringing out the truth, as against the propaganda

Two Rabbis Take Stock

GLEANED from publications in two widely-separated cities, the following quotations make a severe condemnation of the American Jew and his attitude toward his religion. The first quotation is an editorial in The Jewish Ledger of New Orleans, written by that paper's editor, Rabbi Julian B. Feibelman, and the second is an excerpt from the annual report of Rabbi B. Benedict Glazer of Detroit's Beth El Congregation.

The Post needs add no comment to these two forthright statements.

Rabbi Feibelman wrote:

This issue of the Jewish Ledger will appear on Shabouth, the day on which children are confirmed and inducted into the fold of our honored and meaningful faith. Shabouth commemorates the revelation of the Law unto Moses on Mt. Sinai.

Judaism, however, is one thing; Jewry is another. We may rightly ask, "Into what kind of Jewry are we bringing our children," and "Into what are we confirming them?"

The world is torn with strife, and Jewry with the reflection of it. Our most sober thought is directed towards the luke-warmness of the mature generations. Its apathy, smugness and indifference is chilling, and offers no fit spiritual haven for the young. The soul is sleeping within our people, and the appeal to Faith in God lost on them.

We wear our nerves thin trying to inculcate the principles of Judaism into children, who are living in homes and surroundings which have lost interest, set no example, reflect no love nor admiration, and are too busy to be bothered. All of this is what our forebears suffered and died for!

In spite of our stressed education, our better facilities, our modern texts, and our trained teachers, we cannot penetrate the armor of indifference, disinterestedness, and general unawareness. It is a generation which knows not Joseph, nor Moses; neither Amos, Isaiah, nor Jeremiah. "The Best-Seller" will not be found in many of our homes. It will not be read in others. It will be but scantily understood in others.

The days of spiritual drought and famine are upon us, and have been for more than these seven lean years.

We must confess Jewry lives, and waxes fat and kicks. We do not overlook the gigantic activity in its dynamic and vital bodies. These, alas, are bodily strivings, even if the spirit is lacking and dormant. We cannot forget the huge sums of money which have been collected for stricken brethren; the fine causes served valiantly by Jews throughout the land. The intense strivings within the multiple causes of Zionism; and the sober thoughtfulness of those who would protect the name of the Jew from every calumny.

But Judaism is not a cause; it is a confluence of causes. It is not a nationalism; but a true brotherhood, first among brother Jews, and then among mankind. It is not philanthropy, however constructive this evidence of Jewish spiritual has become. Judaism is not an agitation for politicians, seeking to grind their own axes, and then chopping off the heads of opponents. Judaism is a Faith, a meaningful way of life. It is a conduct, a practice, a path, and a goal.

It is a righteous indignation, a fiery passion for good and justice, a valiant contender for the ultimate decency of things. To narrow it into one channel of activity, and this a substitution for the spirit, glory, and fervor of prayer, worship, communion, and devotion, is to dam its broadest potentialities, and freeze its greatest purposes.

To confirm our children into this world, torn, sick, tired and gasping, bodes ill for the standards and determination we have sought to set before them. But to bring them, as latest witnesses, into homes, empty of atmosphere, ignorant of background, teaching and purposes, should surely give parents some pause and concern, and perhaps some intention of supplying what is missing.

Rabbi Glazer said:

... I confess, however, that I am somewhat crestfallen in the presence of good men and women who express every variety of excuse for their failure to attend even a few Friday evening or Saturday morning services during the season. I am moved to wonder if these fine people really understand how significant their presence in, or absence from, the synagogue has become in these times. Today, as never before, the vitality of Jewish religious life must be measured in terms of self-commitment and personal participation. In truth, no worthwhile cause in the world today is destined to survive on the basis of absent treatment. Hitler has destroyed the synagogues of Europe and annihilated the organized religious life of the Jew on several continents. Shall we, through our own carelessness and thoughtlessness, weaken or immobilize our own centers of moral power and spiritual strength? Now, as never before, we must rid ourselves of the fallacy that we have discharged our total obligations to Jewish religious life when we have paid our congregational dues. Today, we must stand up and be counted in the ranks of the Lord of Hosts if we truly believe that millions of men are dying and will die to preserve those traditions of human dignity and freedom that form the foundations of any hope for a better and saner world.

Before I leave the subject of personal participation in the life of the synagogue, may I be permitted to say in all humility and with the best of motives, that I view with a full measure of dismay the prevailing practice of some of our members of being hosts at dinner parties on Friday evening. This is a custom which I know has deprived many the opportunities of Temple attendance. I do not believe that it would entail much inconvenience or sacrifice on the part of any member to confine his entertainment to six evenings in the week and thus avoid embarrassing competition with the Friday evening services. In the interests of our own self-respect, for the example we may set for our children and young people, for the well-being and dignity of Temple Beth El, I express the earnest hope that the coming season will witness a cessation of Friday evening entertainment in the homes of our members during the hour set aside for public worship. I sincerely trust that our leaders will show the way to others in this regard.

Gallin Recognition Well Merited

ELECTION of Meyer Gallin as treasurer of the National Council for Jewish Education as its recent convention in Rochester, N. Y., comes as recognition of his long years of endeavors in his chosen field. Indianapolis Jewish leaders have always found in Mr. Gallin a ready volunteer in any sort of communal work, and his management of the J.E.A. over the past twelve years has been remarkably free of controversy in a part of the community set-up over which there can be as much contention as that of Jewish education.

HAS RECIPES USING LITTLE SUGAR FOR COOKIES FOR SOLDIERS
To the editor,

The soldiers and sailors in the Indianapolis area like cookies in the summer as well as in the winter, but the cookie jars at the Army, Navy, and Marine Service Men's Club, sponsored by the USO, Indianapolis Park Board, and the WPA, are sometimes almost empty. Sugar rationing and not lack of interest is of course the cause. This is the problem for the women of Indianapolis to solve.

The Service Club has recipes using little or no sugar. They are yours for the asking. This might be our answer. Please think over this difficulty and submit your plan for keeping the cookie jars full, to LI. 4414.

PICNIC SET SUNDAY

SPECIAL
LAFAYETTE—The next meeting of the B'nai B'rith Hillel Counselorship at Purdue University here will be in the form of a picnic to be held Sunday, June 14. An entertaining program in the form of a quiz was presented by Ruth Levin, program chairman, at the meeting last Sunday night. Supper was served by the Home Ec-sports.

which the papers (controlled by mysterious groups) were printing. And there were many Jews who took her side. You must recall that type who said they would be willing to approve of the Nazis were anti-Semitism eliminated from their program.

It was an open and shut case. Letters and deposits from German sources proved conclusively that the pair were Nazi agents and propagandists. The case created quite a stir, and I mention it only because I knew about its background.
